

Altogether, I presume that it was written in the year of the late King's death, and was written by some of the great men of the time, who were then in the country, and who had seen the late King's portrait in London, and who were so much in love with it, that they had taken it to the
and who had seen the late King's portrait in London, and who were so much in love with it, that they had taken it to the
and who had seen the late King's portrait
with it, that they had taken it to the
